

Key Facts Not only is Andy Goldsworthy an artist and photographer, he is also an environmentalist. All through his life, he has made artworks from natural things. He does not think his art should last forever; it should be allowed to decay naturally. His work is said to be 'land art' or 'earth art', which is often recorded with photographs. Some of his sculptures are made to be in a specific place.	Andy Goldsworthy (1956-) 	Other Examples of Land Art  Northumberlandia (2010) Charles Jencks  Dualis Fluenta (2020) Jon Foreman
Key Work  Storm King Wall (1997-1998) This artwork is in 'Storm King Art Center' in the USA. It is nearly 700m long and made from 250 tons of stones found in the surrounding area.	Key Work  Icicle Star (1987) This sculpture had to be made in the early morning, before the sun came up and temperatures rose. Many of Goldsworthy's artworks were made from ice and snow at this time.	Key Work  Millennium Cairn (2000) Goldsworthy built this on a hill beside the little village where he lived, saying it gave a feeling of protection to the road.
